

To Whom it may concern,

I have had the pleasure of being one of Colt Eikleberry's varsity baseball coaches here at Boulder Creek HS for what is now the beginning of a third year. Colt was asked to make the transition from middle infielder to outfielder as a sophomore. He did so with enthusiasm and has been our starting centerfielder every game since. I was impressed by his ability to adapt quickly and his desire to improve his skills daily. Colt continues to develop the three main traits that I held in high regard and expected of my teammates when I played. He is dependable, skilled, and selfless. In his now third year as a varsity team member, he excels at those three qualities and has emerged as a true accountable leader for his ball club. He is strong but still a bit slight and trains religiously. He will continue to fill out over the coming years. For me though, the part that is most fun is that he has an instinct and a nose for home plate. He is hell bent on scoring and has become contagious in that among his teammates.
